Police news / reports from the Lethbridge Police Service and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Lethbridge, Alberta, Canada. Lethbridge Police Telephone: 403-328-4444 Report Crime: 1-800-222-8477 The latest numbers are in from Lethbridge police. Officers responded to more than 36,000 calls in 2021. And according to the LPS subject behaviour officer response report, 99.5 per cent of those calls were resolved without any use of force. That stat is similar to 2020, where out of 36,667 calls for service, only 196 required force. That works out to 99.47 per cent of calls where force wasn't applied by officers. The LPS defines force as anything more than cooperative handcuffing or simple escort techniques. The report found in instances where force was required last year, 209 subjects were not injured, 24 sustained minor injuries that didn't require treatment and 13 individuals received out-patient treatment for injuries. Story continues below advertisement LPS training unit Sgt. Rick Semenuik believes de-escalation training, adopted by the service in 2019, is why the majority of calls are resolved peacefully. "One of the big things that came out of that is distance plus cover equals time," Semenuik said. According to the report, only five per cent of individuals in cases where force was required were deemed to be in a normal mental state. Semenuik says when people are in crisis, creating calm in that environment becomes even more important. "Giving members that knowledge, just take your time, give them time to settle down and you'll be able to de-escalate a lot," Semenuik said. At this time, LPS isn't planning any changes to its training and will continue teaching de-escalation moving forward. © 2022 Global News, a division of Corus Entertainment Inc. Police officers have a number of tools at their disposal when they need to initiate an arrest, but the Lethbridge Police Service says its members needed to resort to using force much less often in 2021. According to data released in its Subject Behaviour Officer Response Report, the LPS says it resolved 99.5 per cent of more than 36,000 calls for service in 2021 without the use of force. Officials say this is because LPS members have "comprehensive training" to deal with all different types of situations. "An officer's most valuable tool is their voice," said Acting Staff Sgt. Rick Semenuik, with the LPS training unit in a release. "When we respond to a call, we're trained to assess the situation and subjects involved, re-assess as the matter evolves and in most cases the use of de-escalation and disengagement techniques to help gain the benefit of time and options enables a resolution that does not involve any use of force or result in any injuries." Every time force other than "cooperative handcuffing or escort techniques" is used to arrest a suspect, the officer involved must file a subject behaviour officer response report. "They must also be filed when there's an injury to the officer, subject or bystander, a firearm or less lethal weapon (Conducted Energy Weapon, Arwen, sock gun) is displayed or there's an accidental discharge of a firearm or less lethal weapon," LPS said. Those reports are then reviewed to identify and address any issues or trends that might arise. Between 2020 and 2021, LPS says there were 11 per cent fewer of those reports filed. MENTAL HEALTH TOOLS AVAILABLE While the latest report identified a downward trend in use of force against suspects, LPS says it also highlighted a number of issues presented in the incidents they faced. "In 2021, 40 per cent of the cases where force was used involved subjects who were perceived as being agitated or intoxicated by alcohol or drugs, 28 per cent were in a state of crisis, 19 per cent had, or were reported to have, access to weapons and eight per cent were believed to be suffering from mental illness," police said. As a result of this increase, LPS began a policy to pair a police officer with a mental health therapist to assist in high-risk situations. "All LPS officers are provided ongoing training to help them respond effectively to calls involving individuals suffering from mental health concerns." This spring, the LPS will launch new tools "to better understand and respond to mental health calls." They include a safety briefing to help officers identify if suspects need to be transported to a designated facility and an online resource to teach members about brain development and the effects of stress and adverse experiences on individuals. In Alberta we have three different kinds of police services. The Lethbridge Regional Police Service is administered by the municipal (city) government. Provincial Sheriffs are administered by the provincial government and The Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) by the federal government.
